Electrocardiogram (ECG) Procedure Acknowledgment and Consent

For Female Pilot Applicants Seeking a 1st Class FAA Medical Certificate

As part of your application for a 1st Class FAA Medical Certificate, an Electrocardiogram (ECG) is required once at age 35 or older, and then annually for pilots over the age of 40. This procedure helps assess your cardiac health by measuring the electrical signals generated by your heart with each beat.

Due to current staffing, I do not have female staff available at my West Seattle Office to act as a chaperone during your ECG. I understand the importance of your comfort and privacy. Therefore, please be advised of the following: If you would prefer to have a female staff member present you may change your exam to my Snohomish office at Harvey Airfield.

- The ECG procedure will be performed by Dr. Michael Brown, a male Certifying Aviation Medical Examiner.
- During the ECG, you will be able to keep your bra on.
- Electrodes will be placed on your chest, arms, and legs. This may require temporary lifting of your shirt or bra to apply electrodes to the standard chest area for measuring the ECG.
- The procedure is quick and non-invasive, involving no pain or discomfort other than the application and removal of the electrodes.

By signing below, you acknowledge that you have read and understand the information provided above regarding the unchaperoned ECG procedure. Your signature also signifies your implied consent to proceed with the ECG under these conditions, with the understanding that you may keep your bra on.

You have the right to refuse this procedure at any time, though it is a required component for the issuance of a 1st Class FAA Medical Certificate for pilots over 40 and I will not be able to either complete the exam nor submit your examination results to the FAA, which will delay your medical certification. Should you have any concerns or wish to discuss alternative arrangements, please inform me before the procedure begins.
