Female ECGs

If you are a woman and need an EKG you are free to bring a chaperone with you to the West Seattle Office. If you do not bring anyone, you are giving me consent to perform the EKG with only your bra on and/or your blouse or gown. Since I work alone there will be no other woman in the room with us unless you bring someone with you. A more accurate EKG can often be performed while covered with a paper gown that covers your breasts but you can usually choose to keep your bra on instead of wearing the paper gown if you wish to. You will not need to disrobe.

If you are uncomfortable with this, or cannot arrange a female chaperone, you may schedule your appointment at Harvey Airfield instead, where there are usually female staff present.

If you are a female pilot and have never been to the West Seattle office before or if you have not had a prior EKG performed on you by Dr. Pellerin, you may need to sign a statement giving me permission to do an EKG on you alone in the examining room without a female chaperone.
